

Europe's most prominent VCs ranked in new list for 2021

Dealroom has released its annual ranking of its most prominent venture capital investors for 2021. It follows another record-breaking year in 2020, where VC investment surpassed more than €38B in Europe.

Working closely with the VC community and building on the success of previous years' rankings, Dealroom has created a tool to help startup entrepreneurs and founders work out what investors they should spend time and energy on. The rankings are based on data captured by Dealroom's database and direct feedback from VCs themselves.

Previous rankings have focused on the most prominent Seed and Series A round investors in Europe, but the 2021 edition expands this region to cover the whole of EMEA.

Dealroom has also introduced global rankings for the first time, in part because of the huge appetite from US investors for European tech startups and scaleups. Investments are counted by the territory in which they are made, rather than the location of the investor.

Yoram Wijngaarde, founder and CEO, Dealroom, said: "Two strong themes emerged from VC investing in 2020. The first is that Europe is now firmly on the global investor map. Some of the biggest US funds have voted with their feet, setting up European offices in 2020. Global VCs want to ensure they don't miss the next UIPath – a company founded in Romania that reached a $35B valuation earlier this year.

“The second is that European investors are not letting their foot off the gas.

“European VCs are raising bigger funds, signing bigger cheques, and more of them.

“For the first time, we have been able to rank the most prominent VCs – European and global – across a range of metrics, providing an even more transparent and valuable benchmarking tool for founders, LPs and investors alike.

“Venture Capital and innovation is increasingly borderless. US investors have broadened their horizons, and European VCs are also investing all over the world, driven by global opportunities and enabled by distributed working in the last 12 months. So this year we felt it made sense to add a global ranking into the mix.”
